1. Introduction

Legislative basis for the report

Clause 5H of Schedule 4 to the Broadcasting Services Act 1992 (BSA) provides that:

On the first sitting day of each House of the Parliament after each 1 January, 1 April, 1 July and 1 October from 1 April 2009 until 1 September 2014, the Minister for Broadband, Communications and the Digital Economy (the Minister) must cause a report to be laid before each House of the Parliament containing the following information:

- (a) action taken to identify and rectify transmission infrastructure that would otherwise prevent the transmission of free to air television broadcasting services in SDTV (standard definition television) digital mode in any area achieving the same level of coverage and potential reception quality as was achieved by the transmission of those services in analog mode; and
- (b) the local market areas and regions where transmission issues have been identified and how many households will be affected.

This report updates the previous report tabled on 18 October 2010, and covers the period 1 September to 1 December 2010.

Previous reports can be found on the Department of Broadband, Communications and the Digital Economy's website at:

Initiatives to address digital television terrestrial black spots

Satellite service

On 5 January 2010, the Australian Government announced it would fund a new free-to-air satellite service to provide viewers in remote licence areas, and those in digital television terrestrial black spots in metropolitan and regional licence areas, with access to the same range of digital services (including digital multi-channels such as ONE HD, Eleven, GO!, GEM, 7TWO, 7mate, ABC2, ABC3, ABC News 24 and SBS TWO) as are available in capital cities. Viewers in regional and remote licence areas will also have access to the same commercial broadcaster local news as is provided on terrestrial services to those areas.

On 29 June 2010, the Broadcasting Legislation Amendment (Digital Television) Act 2010 (the Act) received Royal Assent. The Act established the legislative framework for the provision of the new satellite service for digital television black spot areas.

From 15 December 2010 the new satellite service was made available to all residents in the Remote Central and Eastern Australian (RCEA) television licence areas and non-remote viewers who the Australian Communications and Media Authority has authorised the RCEA broadcasters (Southern Cross Media and Imparja Television) to provide their services to 'out of area' viewers. Southern Cross Media and Imparja Television provide the commercial digital television channels on the satellite service available to viewers in Eastern Australia. WIN and Prime are expected to soon provide the equivalent free-to-air satellite service to eligible viewers in Western Australia.

The new satellite service is now available to eligible viewers in the five licence areas that have switched over to digital television in 2010 as well as the area defined as the Regional Victoria switchover area which switches over to digital television on 5 May 2011. The new satellite service will be made available to viewers in digital television black spots in metropolitan and regional switchover areas at least six months before their area is due to switchover. A copy of the switchover timetable is at Appendix 4.

In order to access the new satellite service viewers will require direct-to-home satellite reception equipment, including a satellite dish and set-top box. The costs of installation will vary depending on location, the size of the satellite receiving dish required and characteristics of the viewer's home. To check eligibility for the new satellite service and/or apply to access the service an applicant should enter their installation address in the mySwitch application on the website www.digitalready.gov.au. Further details of how to access the new satellite service can be found on the website www.digitalready.gov.au and www.mysattv.com.au.

The new satellite service provides services for viewers in digital television terrestrial black spots, including those currently located in areas served by analog television self-help retransmission sites that are not converted to digital by the broadcasters or their operators (see 'Enhanced terrestrial coverage' below). To assist viewers, the government is providing a satellite conversion subsidy to eligible households currently served by self-help transmission sites which are not upgraded to digital by the broadcasters. Details of how to access the subsidy can be found on the website www.digitalready.gov.au.

Enhanced terrestrial coverage

The free-to-air broadcasters have agreed to upgrade a number of analog self help transmission facilities to operate in digital. The free-to-air commercial broadcasters have developed, and provided to the government, candidate lists of existing analog television self-help retransmission sites in regional and metropolitan licence areas for conversion to digital. Free TV Australia, the industry's peak representative body, has advised the government that a total of 131 of existing sites in metropolitan or regional areas are expected to be digital-enabled either through the conversion of some existing self-help facilities, the installation of new broadcaster-operated facilities to cover gaps in digital coverage, or by being served by existing transmission facilities. Further information on these sites is provided in Section 4 below.

Viewers served by the remaining analog television self-help retransmission sites in metropolitan and regional licence areas, and all self-help sites in remote areas, will be eligible to access the new satellite service.

The conversion of self-help sites on the broadcasters' list will be managed and funded by the broadcasters themselves, but will still require the involvement of the local council or other operator of the site. It will be open to the operators of any self-help site on the candidate list to reach terms with broadcasters on the offer of an upgrade, or to pursue an alternative arrangement such as upgrading the site to digital themselves. Broadcasters are not currently proposing to upgrade any sites in remote licence areas.

The ACMA Television Coverage Evaluation Program

The ACMA has a multifaceted television coverage evaluation program that can contribute to identifying transmission infrastructure issues that would otherwise prevent the transmission of television broadcasting from achieving the objectives relating to same level of coverage and potential reception quality in local markets and licence areas. As part of the planning process the ACMA requires broadcasters to identify any potential transmission issues that may need to be addressed in order to achieve the objectives relating to same level of coverage and potential reception quality. The ACMA has an active measurement program to support the evaluation program.

The ACMA's measurement program has the capacity to identify potential coverage issues including areas of potential reception difficulties. The ACMA also has regular and ongoing dialogue with the senior broadcasting engineers through professional forums and directly with commercial and national broadcasters and their infrastructure providers.

The ACMA's measurement program is currently operating in local television markets in regional New South Wales and the Australian Capital Territory, tracking ahead of the switchover timetable. Measurement results are analysed and reported to the broadcasters, infrastructure providers and the Department of Broadband, Communications and the Digital Economy. Reports are available from the ACMA's website at www.acma.gov.au.

Digital television transmission regulatory framework

Schedule 4 to the BSA requires the ACMA to formulate a Commercial Television Conversion Scheme (CTCS) and a National Television Conversion Scheme (NTCS) for the conversion, over time, of the transmission of commercial television broadcasting services and national television broadcasting services from analog mode to digital mode.

The BSA requires the conversion schemes to be directed toward a number of policy objectives relating to digital transmissions achieving the same level of coverage and potential reception quality as is achieved by corresponding analog services.¹ The CTCS and NTCS include a range of specific planning and licensing provisions that flow from the objectives relating to the same level of coverage and potential reception quality.

Under the conversion schemes, the ACMA makes Digital Channel Plans (DCPs) that assign channels to commercial and national broadcasters for the provision of their digital television services to particular areas.

The conversion schemes require commercial and national broadcasters to submit for approval one or more implementation plans (IP) relating to digital transmission. The IP is a broadcaster's commitment, approved by the ACMA (for commercial licensees) or the Minister (for national broadcasters), to:

- provide transmission of a television broadcasting service in digital mode from specified sites;
- cover specified areas by specified dates; and
- meet the objectives relating to same level of coverage and potential reception quality.

Section 2 and Section 3 of this report deal with the progress commercial and national broadcasters have made in non-remote (metropolitan and regional) and remote licence areas towards meeting these objectives respectively.

In addition to the transmission facilities operated by commercial and national broadcasters, there are more than 600 analog television self-help retransmission sites operated by local government authorities, Indigenous or community groups, or other parties. These are designed to obtain, or to improve, analog television terrestrial reception in areas unable to obtain adequate reception from existing broadcaster-operated transmission facilities. Such services are not covered by the conversion schemes and so the obligations and policy objectives of these schemes do not apply to their operators.

It is likely that many areas with deficient analog television terrestrial reception will also have deficient digital television reception unless (as per ‘Enhanced terrestrial coverage’ above):

- the broadcasters wider digital footprint reaches the area;
- the broadcasters or current operator convert an existing analog television self-help retransmission site to digital; or
- a local council or group establishes a new digital television self-help retransmission site.

Section 4 of this report provides information on existing analog television self-help retransmission sites as well as information on the candidate lists Free TV Australia has developed of existing self-help sites in non-remote licence areas for conversion to digital.

2. Commercial and national free-to-air broadcasters in metropolitan and regional television licence areas

This section reports on the progress made by commercial television broadcasting licensees and national broadcasters in metropolitan and regional television licence areas with the objective of achieving the same level of coverage and potential reception quality for their service in digital mode as is achieved by the transmission of that service in analog mode.

Progress in achieving “same level of coverage and potential reception quality”

The ACMA currently expects approximately 1247 implementation plans (IPs) to be submitted for services in metropolitan and regional licence areas.²

To 1 December 2010, there have been 1005 IPs approved in metropolitan and regional licence areas; 471 for national broadcasting services and 534 for commercial broadcasting services. At the same date there were 66 IPs undergoing the approval process culminating in 1071 IPs approved or in process. 38 test licences have been issued so that services could commence in advance of IP approval and a further 37 test licences have been issued in advance of the submission of IPs.

Between 1 September 2010 and 1 December 2010 there were 7 IPs approved for commercial broadcasting services in non remote licence areas. One IP was approved for a national broadcasting service in a non remote licence area in the same time period.

Digital services covered by the conversion schemes have commenced at all transmitter sites within metropolitan licence areas.

Areas where no digital services have commenced transmission

The following table lists areas in regional television licence areas where no broadcaster provided digital services required under the commercial or national television conversion schemes had commenced transmission as at 1 December 2010. This list is based on advice provided to the ACMA by the broadcasters.

² The precise number of IPs finally submitted may differ from these figures, as broadcasters have discretion regarding which of their services are described in which Implementation Plan.

Licence area	Switchover market	Area Served	Comment ³
Darwin		Batchelor	Only TND service licensed to a broadcaster.
		Darwin North	Alternative site being considered for digital services.
Northern NSW	Hunter	Collaroy	Only service is an NBN analog service.
Regional Qld	Far North Queensland	Cardwell	Only STQ and RTQ services licensed to broadcasters.
	North Queensland	Bowen	Alternative site being considered for digital services.
Regional Vic	Goulburn Valley/Upper Murray	Howqua	Only AMV and GLV services licensed to broadcasters.
		Yackandandah	Only GLV and VTV services licensed to broadcasters (may not be required in digital).
	North Central Victoria	Hopetoun (VIC)	ABC digital provided from alternative site. Alternative site being considered for commercials.
Southern NSW	ACT and Southern Tablelands	Captains Flat	Only CTC service licensed to broadcaster.
	Illawarra and the South Coast	Bega/Cooma	Only ABC analog at this site. Alternative sites implemented.
	South West Slopes and Eastern Riverina	Adelong	Only CTC and WIN services licensed to broadcasters.
		Talbingo	Only CTC and WIN services licensed to broadcasters.
		Tumbarumba	Only CBN service licensed to broadcaster.
Tasmania		Maydena	Only TNT and TVT services licensed to broadcasters.
		Hillwood, Mangana, Pyengana Valley, Rokeby, South Springfield, Strathgordon and Weldborough	Only one or two analog services. May not be required in digital.

Areas where some digital services have yet to commence transmission

The following table lists areas in regional television licence areas where some digital services provided by broadcasters and required under the commercial or national television conversion schemes had yet to commence as at 1 December 2010. This list is based on advice provided to the ACMA by the broadcasters.

In the period 1 September 2010 to 1 December 2010, all digital services have become operational at Goondiwindi, Texas, Herberton, Ravenshoe and Middlemount in the Regional Queensland licence area; Cann River, Genoa, Mallacoota, Orbost, Alexandra, Bonnie Doon, Eildon, Mansfield and Yea in the Regional Victoria licence area; Dungog, Inverell and Gloucester in the Northern New South Wales licence area; and Binalong Bay, St Helens and St Marys in the Tasmanian licence area. The table below has been updated to reflect these changes.

A complete list of the areas covered by the conversion schemes and their digital rollout status is at Appendix 1.

3. Commercial and national free-to-air broadcasters in remote television licence areas

This section reports on the progress made by commercial television broadcasting licensees and national broadcasters in remote television licence areas with the objective of achieving the same level of coverage and potential reception quality for their television service in digital mode as is achieved by the transmission of that service in analog mode.

There are five licence areas in Remote and Regional WA (South West and Great Southern TV1, Kalgoorlie TV1, Geraldton TV1, Western Zone TV1 and Remote and Regional WA TV1) and three licence areas in Remote Central and Eastern Australia (Remote Central and Eastern Australia TV1, Remote Central and Eastern Australia TV2 and Mt Isa TV1). The ACMA has now set commencement dates for all the Remote and Regional WA licence areas.

The ACMA expects approximately 437 IPs to be submitted for commercial and national television services in remote licence areas.⁵ To 1 December 2010 there have been 127 IPs approved in remote licence areas - 115 for national broadcasting services; and 12 for commercial broadcasting services. At the same date there were 62 national IPs undergoing the approval process. Test licences have been issued for two of these IPs so that the services could commence in advance of IP approval.

Between 1 September 2010 and 1 December 2010 there were no IPs approved by the Government for national broadcasting services in remote licence areas and no IPs approved for commercial broadcasting services in remote licence areas.

The following information about the commencement of digital television services is based on advice provided to the ACMA by broadcasters.

At 1 December 2010:

- all digital services required under the conversion schemes had been implemented at 22 transmitter sites;
- one or more but not all digital services required under the conversion schemes had been implemented at a further 61 sites; and
- no digital services had been implemented at the remaining 85 sites covered by conversion schemes.

All digital services required by broadcasters under the conversion schemes have now commenced at the following areas:

Remote and Regional Western Australia licence areas:

Central Agricultural, Cervantes, Dalwallinu, Denham, Jurien, Kalgoorlie, Karratha, Lake Grace, Leeman, Leinster, Marble Bar, Mingenew, Northampton, Onslow and Wongan Hills.

Remote Central and Eastern Australia licence areas:

Caralue Bluff, Injune, Leigh Creek South, Quilpie, Richmond, Streaky Bay and Wudinna.

In all the above areas except Central Agricultural, Kalgoorlie, Karratha and Mingenew, only national services are required under the conversion schemes as there are no commercial services licensed to the broadcasters.

⁵ The precise number of Implementation Plans finally submitted may differ from these figures, as broadcasters have discretion regarding which of their services are described in which Implementation Plan.

Between 1 September and 1 December 2010 in remote licence areas, ABC digital television services commenced at Cunnamulla.

A complete list of the areas covered by the conversion schemes and their digital rollout status is at Appendix 1.

Areas where no digital services have commenced transmission

The following table contains areas in remote television licence areas and covered by the conversion schemes where no commercial or national broadcaster provided digital services had commenced transmission as at 1 December 2010. 4. Existing analog self-help retransmission sites and other likely terrestrial digital reception deficient areas

As terrestrial digital television channel planning is designed to provide digital television services at the same level of coverage and potential reception quality as existing broadcaster analog television services, it is likely that many areas with deficient terrestrial analog reception will also have deficient terrestrial digital reception.

Analog self help sites are potentially areas of digital signal deficiency because they are not required to be converted under digital conversion schemes. This will be addressed where:

- the broadcasters' wider digital footprint reaches the area;
- the broadcasters or current operator convert an existing analog television self-help retransmission site to digital; or
- a local council or group establishes a new digital television self-help retransmission site.

Information on the candidate lists Free TV Australia has developed of existing self-help sites in non-remote licence areas for conversion to digital appears at the end of this section.

The Viewer Access Satellite Television (VAST) service being funded by the government provides digital television services to eligible households where no terrestrial coverage is available. Satellite reception equipment needs to be installed to receive this service.

Analog self-help retransmission sites

There are many sites across Australia where self-help retransmission facilities are serving communities which do not have access to adequate free-to-air terrestrial television services provided by the broadcasters. These facilities are located mainly in regional and remote areas of Australia. These self-help retransmission facilities are designed to extend or enhance analog television reception in areas unable to otherwise obtain adequate reception from existing broadcaster-operated transmission sites. A mix of self-help and broadcaster-provided services are transmitted from some sites.

Local councils or community and indigenous groups often operate these self-help retransmission facilities on behalf of the community. Remote indigenous community television services operate at some sites. In each case, the local council or community group is responsible for operating and maintaining the retransmission facilities and for meeting associated (ongoing) costs.

A list of existing known analog self-help retransmission sites is at Appendix 2.

Metropolitan and regional self-help retransmission facilities

The ACMA estimates that there are 179 sites with one or more self-help retransmission services located in metropolitan and regional licence areas. Of these sites, 37 are located in metropolitan areas and 142 are located in regional licence areas. Metropolitan and regional self-help retransmission sites have generally been established to 'infill' areas that the broadcasters' signals fail to cover and 'extend' coverage to areas far removed from the broadcasters' main transmission site. These sites typically receive off-air program feeds from the analog terrestrial transmitters of the local broadcasters.

There are approximately 22,000 households served by self-help retransmission facilities in metropolitan areas, and 48,000 households in regional areas.

Remote area analog terrestrial self-help retransmission sites

The ACMA estimates that there are 303 self-help analog terrestrial retransmission sites in Remote Central and Eastern Australia licence areas (RCEA) and 181 in the Remote and Regional Western Australia licence areas (RRWA). The estimated total number of households served by self-help retransmission sites in the RCEA is 50,000. In RRWA, self-help retransmission sites serve an estimated 35,000 households.

The remote area self-help retransmission sites have generally been established to ‘extend’ coverage to areas far removed from the broadcasters’ main terrestrial transmission sites. These sites are predominantly satellite-fed.

Candidate lists of self-help sites to be converted by broadcasters

Commercial broadcasters have advised the government that they will upgrade a number of self-help retransmission sites to digital. The following two lists have been prepared, and provided to the government, by Free TV Australia and Regional Broadcasting Australia. The selection of candidate sites for conversion is a matter for broadcasters.

The lists are intended to provide information to operators of existing self-help retransmission sites in metropolitan and regional areas about:

- sites that are on the broadcasters’ candidate list for conversion to digital
- sites that in the broadcasters’ view will not need to be converted because digital services will be provided to the area from other nearby existing or planned broadcaster provided sites.
- In most cases, new or converted sites will be established no later than six months before switchover in the area. Establishment of new sites will be subject to availability of broadcasting spectrum.
- Commercial broadcasters have confirmed that they will not be converting existing self-help sites located in the RCEA and RRWA. The primary option for communities in these areas that currently rely on self-help retransmission sites would be to receive their digital services through the new government funded satellite service.
- In addition to upgrades to existing sites broadcasters are likely to establish other ‘gap filler’ sites at locations where no services are currently available.

Broadcasters’ candidate list of self-help retransmission sites for conversion from analog to digital Commercial broadcasters have identified the following analog television self-help retransmission sites as candidates for conversion from analog to digital. The final decision about whether any specific self-help site will be converted will be a matter for negotiation between the current licensee of the site and broadcasters, and will depend on agreement being reached.

The broadcasters’ offer to licensees is for broadcasters to pay for digital transmission equipment and transmitter maintenance for ten years, with the existing licensees being responsible for the ongoing maintenance and operation of the site infrastructure. The licence for the transmitter will be held by the broadcasters.

There are a total of 79 self-help retransmission sites on the broadcasters’ candidate list (22 in metropolitan areas and 57 in regional areas). This list is being updated as switchover progresses nationally and broadcasters complete more detailed assessments of the commercial or technical viability of sites.

The following table represents the Department of Broadband, Communications and the Digital Economy's understanding of the current composition of the list.

Existing self-help retransmission sites that may be covered by a wider digital footprint and gap fillers* ‘Gap fillers’ are new, digital-only, terrestrial transmission sites that are owned and operated by the broadcasters. They provide services to areas that have not been previously been served by digital terrestrial transmitters.

Whether or not viewers in these areas will need to access the new satellite service will depend on whether broadcasters are able to guarantee that adequate coverage will be available from a terrestrial site, either a new gap filler site or an existing digital terrestrial facility.

There are a total of 44 self-help retransmission sites that may be covered by a wider digital footprint and gap fillers (10 in metropolitan areas and 34 in regional areas).

*Broadcasters are likely to install additional digital only gap fillers across Australia. While these may not cover existing self-help sites, they will improve digital television coverage for many viewers.

Appendix 1: Status as at 1 December 2010 of digital television service rollout in areas considered in digital channel plans under the National Television Conversion Scheme and the Commercial Television Conversion Scheme. Based on advice from broadcasters.

Note 1: This table includes ‘hybrid’ sites where some services may be broadcaster provided in addition to analog self-help services.

Note 2: This table includes analog remote indigenous television broadcasting services that are co-located in areas served by analog self-help retransmissions. Remote indigenous television broadcasting services are licensed by the ACMA as either community television broadcasting services or as open narrowcasting services. Both are identified with the abbreviation CTV in this table). This table does not include a number of remote indigenous broadcasting services that are not co-located with analog self help retransmission sites.
