1. Introduction

Legislative basis for the report

Clause 5H of Schedule 4 to the Broadcasting Services Act 1992 (BSA) provides that:

On the first sitting day of each House of the Parliament after each 1 January, 1 April, 1 July and 1 October from 1 April 2009 until 1 September 2014, the Minister must cause a report to be laid before each House of the Parliament containing the following information:

- (a) action taken to identify and rectify transmission infrastructure that would otherwise prevent the transmission of free to air television broadcasting services in SDTV (standard definition television) digital mode in any area achieving the same level of coverage and potential reception quality as was achieved by the transmission of those services in analog mode; and
- (b) the local market areas and regions where transmission issues have been identified and how many households will be affected.

Digital television transmission regulatory framework

Schedule 4 to the BSA requires the Australian Communications and Media Authority (ACMA) to formulate schemes for the conversion, over time, of the transmission of television broadcasting services from analog mode to digital mode. The national and commercial television conversion schemes (NTCS and CTCS) are divided into two parts. Part A, which is to deal with licence areas that are not remote licence areas and Part B, which deals with remote licence areas.

The BSA requires the conversion schemes to be directed toward a number of policy objectives relating to digital transmissions achieving the same level of coverage and potential reception quality as is achieved by corresponding analog services.¹ The NTCS and the CTCS include a range of specific planning and licensing provisions that flow from the objectives relating to the same level of coverage and potential reception quality.

Under the conversion schemes ACMA makes digital channel plans (DCPs) that:

- consider the objectives of the BSA and conversion schemes relating to the same level of coverage and potential reception quality;
- allot channels to areas and assign channels to broadcasters;
- set out any technical limitations on the use of a particular channel that the ACMA believes should be shown in the plan; and
- set out whether the use of a channel depends on any event or circumstances described in the plan.

The conversion schemes require commercial and national broadcasters to submit for approval one or more implementation plans (IP). The IP is a broadcaster's commitment, approved by ACMA (for commercial licensees) or Minister (for national broadcasters), to:

¹ See, for example, clauses 6(3)(f), 6(3)(j), 19(3)(f) and 19(3)(j) of Schedule 4 to the BSA in relation to non-remote licence areas, and Part B of the Commercial and National conversion schemes in relation remote licence areas.

- provide transmission of a television broadcasting service in digital mode from specified sites;
- cover specified areas by specified dates; and
- meet the objectives relating to same level of coverage and potential reception quality.

Section 2 and 3 of this report deals with the progress of the commercial and national broadcasters in metropolitan, regional and remote television licence areas in meeting these objectives.

In addition to the transmission facilities controlled by broadcasters, there are a number of analog self-help retransmission facilities. These are designed to obtain, or to improve, analog television reception in areas unable to obtain adequate reception from existing broadcaster-operated transmission sites. Self-help retransmission facilities are not covered by the CTCS or the NTCS, and so the obligations and policy objectives of these schemes do not apply to self-help retransmission facilities.

It is likely that many areas with deficient analog reception will also have deficient digital reception. Section 4 provides information on existing analog self-help retransmission facilities, and other analog black spots that were addressed through alternative means.

ACMA Television Coverage Evaluation Program

ACMA has a multifaceted television coverage evaluation program that can contribute to identifying transmission infrastructure issues that would otherwise prevent the transmission of television broadcasting from achieving the objectives relating to same level of coverage and potential reception quality in local markets and licence areas. As part of the planning process ACMA requires broadcasters to identify any potential transmission issues that may need to be addressed in order to achieve the objectives relating to same level of coverage and potential reception quality. ACMA has an active measurement program to support the evaluation program.

ACMA's measurement program has the capacity to identify potential coverage issues including areas of potential reception difficulties. ACMA also has regular and ongoing dialogue with the senior broadcasting engineers through professional forums and directly with commercial and national broadcasters and their infrastructure providers.

ACMA's measurement program is operating in local television markets including Mildura/Sunraysia, regional South Australia, and regional Victoria, tracking ahead of the switchover timetable. Measurement results are analysed and reported to the broadcasters, infrastructure providers and the Department of Broadband, Communications and the Digital Economy.

A summary of measurement findings from the Mildura/Sunraysia licence area is presented in Section 5 of this report. Subsequent reports on digital television transmission and reception will include information gathered from other switchover areas.

Measures to address signal deficiency

The Australian Government, through the Digital Switchover Taskforce, is coordinating Australia's conversion to digital television, and is working to improve viewer access to digital television. This includes the digital conversion of analog self-help retransmission facilities and the provision of television services to viewers currently unable to receive television.

On 29 January 2009, the Minister for Broadband, Communications and the Digital Economy announced a package of measures for a digital switchover pilot in the Mildura/Sunraysia region in 2010. The package includes a new satellite service to extend access to digital television. It is intended that the new satellite service will ensure that Australians living in areas of the Mildura/Sunraysia region where broadcasters have not built transmitters, or where broadcasters' signals do not reach, will not be denied access to digital television. The lessons learned from the switchover in Mildura will help to inform the approach to the broader digital switchover program around the country.

2. Commercial and national free-to-air broadcasters in metropolitan and regional television licence areas

This section reports on the progress made by commercial television broadcasting licensees and national broadcasters in metropolitan and regional television licence areas in achieving the objectives relating to the same level of coverage and potential reception quality for their service in digital mode as is achieved by the transmission of that service in analog mode.

Requirements for commercial and national television broadcasting services

Paragraph 7(1)(k) of Schedule 2 to the BSA provides that it is a condition of a commercial television broadcasting licence that the licensee will comply with the requirements of the CTCS in force under clause 6 of Schedule 4 to the BSA.

Subclause 6(1) of Schedule 4 provides that the ACMA must formulate a scheme for the conversion, over time, of the transmission of commercial television broadcasting services from analog mode to digital mode. Subclause 19(1) of Schedule 4 provides that the ACMA must also formulate a similar scheme for the conversion national television broadcasting services.

Part A of both the CTCS and the NTCS deals with licence areas that are not remote licence areas, and are directed towards the achievement of various policy objectives, including that, as soon as is practicable after the start of the simulcast period for a licence area, and throughout the remainder of that period, the transmission of a commercial or national television broadcasting service in standard definition digital mode in that area should achieve the same level of coverage and potential reception quality as is achieved by the transmission of that service in analog mode in that area (paragraphs 6(3)(f) and 19(3)(f) of Schedule 4 to the BSA).

The CTCS provides for commercial television broadcasting licensees to prepare, and submit to the ACMA, one or more implementation plans relating to digital transmission, where the implementation plans are in accordance with the conversion scheme. It is a condition of a commercial television broadcasting licence that a licensee must comply with the implementation plan submitted in accordance with the conversion scheme, as approved by the ACMA (paragraph 7(1)(l) of Schedule 2 to the BSA).

Each commercial television broadcasting licensee is required to advise ACMA of how the licensee proposes to:

- transmit a commercial television broadcasting service in digital mode; and
- comply with the BSA; and
- meet the objectives of subclause 6(3) of Schedule 4 to the BSA and including, in particular, paragraph 6(3)(f) (relating to achieve the same level of coverage and potential reception quality as detailed above).

The ACMA notes in the CTCS that the implementation plan is a key step in the digital conversion process. It is a licensee's binding commitment, approved by the ACMA, to:

- provide transmission of a commercial television broadcasting service in digital mode from specified sites; and

- cover specified areas by specified dates; and
- achieve the same level of coverage and potential reception quality as is achieved by the transmission of that service in analog mode.

The NTCS provides for a national broadcaster to give the Minister one or more implementation plans relating to the conversion of the transmission of the service from analog to digital mode. These plans are reviewed by ACMA prior to their submission to the Minister. The implementation plan comes into force on approval of the Minister.

Progress in achieving “same level of coverage and potential reception quality”

ACMA expects 1189 implementation plans (IPs) to be submitted for services in metropolitan and regional licence areas.² To 1 April 2009, there have been 868 IPs approved in metropolitan and regional licence areas; 472 for national broadcasting services and 396 for commercial broadcasting services. At the same date there were 90 IPs undergoing the approval process but which have had test licences issued so that services could commence in advance of IP approval.

Digital services covered by the conversion schemes have commenced in at all transmitter sites within metropolitan licence areas.

The following table lists areas in regional television licence areas where digital services by commercial or national broadcasting services, as required by the conversion schemes, have yet to commence transmission. This list is based on advice provided to ACMA by the broadcasters. Services in these areas have not commenced for reasons including problems providing suitable input signals to the transmitter, and ongoing assessment regarding whether the digital service will be required.³

Digital transmitter rollout progress for digital services from all sites considered in digital channel plans under the Commercial Television Conversion Scheme and the National Television Conversion Scheme is at Appendix 1.

3. Commercial and national free-to-air broadcasters in remote television licence areas

This section reports on the progress made by commercial television broadcasting licensees and national broadcasters in remote television licence areas relating to the objectives of achieving the same level of coverage and potential reception quality for their television service in digital mode as is achieved by the transmission of that service in analog mode.

Part B of the CTCS is directed towards ensuring the achievement of the policy objective that each holder of a commercial television broadcasting licence for a remote licence area is required to commence transmitting the commercial television broadcasting service concerned in SDTV digital mode in that during the simulcast period. The simulcast period for a remote licence area is to be determined by the ACMA (subclause 6(6A) of Schedule 4 of the BSA).

As with Part A of the CTCS, subclause 19(1) of Schedule 4 provides that ACMA must also formulate a similar scheme for the conversion national television broadcasting services.

National broadcasters have commenced rollout of digital television services in remote licence areas.

ACMA expects 345 IPs to be submitted for commercial and national television services in remote licence areas.⁵

To 1 April 2009 there have been 73 IPs approved in remote licence areas for national television broadcasting services. There were 10 IPs for national television broadcasting services awaiting approval but which have had test licences issued so that services could commence in advance of IP approval.

At 1 April 2009:

- All digital services by both national television broadcasting services required under the conversion schemes had been implemented at 10 transmitter sites;
- one or more but not all digital services required under the conversion schemes had been implemented at 36 sites; and
- no digital services had been implemented at the remaining 122 sites covered by conversion schemes.

All digital services required by national broadcasters under the conversion scheme have commenced at the following areas in the Remote and Regional Western Australia licence areas: Cervantes, Dalwallinu, Denham, Jurien, Lake Grace, Leeman, Leinster, Marble Bar, Northampton and Wongan Hills.

There are no areas in the Remote Central and Eastern Australia licence areas where all services required under the conversion schemes have been implemented.

⁵ The precise number of Implementation Plans finally submitted may differ from this figure, as broadcasters have discretion regarding which of their services are described in which Implementation Plan.

A complete list of the areas covered by the conversion schemes and their digital rollout status is at Appendix 1.

4. Existing analog self-help retransmission sites and other likely digital reception deficient areas

This section reports on locations likely to experience deficient digital signal reception, including existing analog self-help retransmission sites and other existing analog television reception black spots. As digital television channel planning is designed to provide digital television services that provide the same level of coverage and potential reception quality as existing broadcaster analogue TV services, it is likely that many areas with deficient analog reception will also have deficient digital reception.

Analog self-help retransmission sites

There are approximately 680 sites across Australia where self-help retransmission facilities are currently licensed and serving communities which do not have access to adequate (or any) broadcaster-provided free-to-air terrestrial television services.⁶ These facilities are located mainly in regional and remote areas of Australia. These self-help retransmission facilities are designed to extend or enhance analog television reception in areas unable to otherwise obtain adequate reception from existing broadcaster-operated transmission sites. A mix of self-help and broadcaster-provided services are transmitted from some sites.

Local councils or community groups often operate these self-help facilities on behalf of the community. Remote Indigenous communities are licensed to operate at some sites. In each case, the local council or community group is responsible for operating and maintaining the retransmission facilities and for meeting associated (ongoing) costs.

Metropolitan and regional self-help retransmission facilities

There are 186 sites with one or more self-help services located in metropolitan and regional licence areas. Of these sites, 37 are located in metropolitan areas; 149 are located in regional licence areas. Metropolitan and regional self-help retransmission sites have generally been established to ‘infill’ areas that the broadcasters’ signals fail to cover and ‘extend’ coverage to areas far removed from the broadcasters’ main transmission site. These sites typically receive off-air feeds from the analog terrestrial transmitters of the local broadcasters.

There are approximately 22,000 households served by self-help retransmission facilities in metropolitan areas, and 48,000 households in regional areas.

Remote area analogue terrestrial self-help retransmission sites

There are 312 self-help analog terrestrial retransmission sites in Remote Central and Eastern Australia licence areas (RCEA) and 187 in the Remote and Regional Western Australia licence areas (RRWA). The estimated total number of households served by self-help retransmission sites in the RCEA is 50,000. In regional/remote Western Australia, self-help retransmission sites serve an estimated 35,000 households.

The remote area self-help retransmission sites have generally been established to ‘extend’ coverage to areas far removed from the broadcasters’ main terrestrial transmission sites.

⁶ The Department estimates there are up to 18 additional remote self-help retransmission facilities whose licensed status is uncertain.

These sites are predominantly satellite-fed. They access the commercial television services provided by GWN/Prime and WIN in RRWA, and Imparja and Southern Cross Central in RCEA. WIN and Imparja provide Nine Network programming. Imparja also provides some indigenous programming. GWN/Prime and Southern Cross Central provide Seven Network programming with some Network Ten programming.

A list of existing analog self-help transmission sites not subject to digital conversion is at Appendix 2.

SBS Self-Help Retransmission Scheme

This SBS Scheme is funded by the Australian Government on an annual basis. Financial assistance is and has been made available under the Scheme to assist communities to establish an analog SBS radio, analog television and more recently digital television self-help service.

To date assistance has been approved for 64 analog television services and two SBS digital television services. Some of these may involve sites where Commonwealth funding was previously provided to establish other analog television services.

Television Black Spots Programs

Analog Television Black Spots Program

The Television Black Spots Program (TVBSP) was an application-based program. The TVBSP closed on 30 June 2005. 574 analog television blackspots were identified in submissions lodged under the TVBSP.

Under the TVBSP, local councils and incorporated community groups were eligible to lodge submissions seeking funding to establish new analog television services, or to replace obsolete analog television equipment at existing self-help retransmission sites. Communities seeking funding for new services had to provide evidence that at least 50 permanently occupied households were to benefit. There was no household requirement regarding the replacement of obsolete equipment. Funding recipients were responsible for the ongoing operation and maintenance of the facilities.

Under the TVBSP, 241 new retransmission facilities were established. The TVBSP also provided funding for the replacement of obsolete television transmission equipment at 182 existing retransmission sites, 106 of which serve Indigenous communities. 151 blackspots identified by communities did not proceed.

Digital Television Black Spots—Alternative Technical Solutions Program

The Television Black Spots—Alternative Technical Solutions (ATS) Program commenced in 2002-03 and will close on 30 June 2009. The ATS Program was implemented to fix black spots that could not be assisted by the analog TVBSP.

Under the ATS Program, funding was provided for retransmission of the local free-to-air digital television services and for direct-to-home (DTH) satellite equipment for individual householders in the identified black spot. While local cabling for individual householders in an identified black spot was also an option, no such facilities have been established under the ATS Program. The ATS Program financed 11 solutions for 16 black spots.

The following tables contain information about television blackspots identified under the TVBSP, as well as the projects that were subsequently considered under the ATS Program.⁷

⁸ These TVBSP projects did not proceed for reasons including: the analog (and/or digital) TV signal was assessed as being adequate; the community group was not prepared to cover the ongoing costs (a requirement under the program); a reassessment indicated that the blackspot had under 50 households (the threshold for new services consideration); application withdrawn by the community group; the community group was not prepared to accept funding to receive out-of-area services (this is because some communities in regional areas who could not access the regional commercial television services did not want the alternative, that being the remote commercial television services from satellite).

Direct-to-home satellite services

Currently, approximately 80 000 households have DTH reception equipment to access satellite-delivered ABC, SBS and the remote commercial television services provided for the regional/remote Western Australia and the RCEA markets.

Satellite-delivered ABC and SBS television services are provided on a national basis and are thus freely available. Satellite-delivered WIN and GWN commercial television services are available to viewers residing in remote/regional Western Australia, and in the RCEA licence area Southern Cross and Imparja provide satellite-delivered commercial television services.

Viewers residing outside regional/remote Western Australia and the RCEA licence areas, and who have difficulties in receiving their local terrestrial television services, may apply to ACMA to access remote commercial satellite-delivered television services.

5. Mildura/Sunraysia television licence area

As part of its Digital Television Coverage Evaluation Program, ACMA has considered the Mildura/Sunraysia licence area. Implementation plans for the Mildura/Sunraysia area were approved on the basis that the broadcasters would meet the objectives relating to the same level of coverage and potential reception quality. ACMA has undertaken systematic analog and digital television signal measurements in this area. Analysis of those measurements indicates that the broadcasters' transmissions are within the expected range.

Considering the relevant Digital Channel Plans, approved Implementation Plans and measurements, together, ACMA's analysis is consistent with the view that broadcasters in the Mildura/Sunraysia licence area have met the objectives relating to same level of coverage and potential reception quality. Accordingly, there are no outstanding infrastructure issues to report with respect to clause 5H(a).

In respect to clause 5H(b), the coverage analysis identified a number of communities within the Mildura/Sunraysia licence area that are poor analog reception areas, and are also poor digital reception areas. These communities include the larger centres of Ouyen (544 households) and Underbool (89 households), as well as other centres such as Boinka and Walpeup. They are situated outside the intended broadcasting transmission service area.

Appendix 1: Status as at 1 April 2009 of digital television service rollout in areas considered in digital channel plans under the National Television Conversion Scheme and the Commercial Television Commercial Scheme.
